Chapter 1

Introduction

1.1 Motivation

For any large or a small-scale Organization, in this case a Hotel or a Restaurant, it is necessary to maintain a website to take care of the administration and represent them online, for a better reach and marketing, to directly impact the brand, services and sales. Hence, we came up with our Resort Management website, which provides the features

1.2 Abstract

Our Project is a representation of a website prototype of a very large-scale Hotel and Resort Management. Here we have included the Features of Resort Management, where users of the online community can view various details, process them, perform online Bookings, check rates and availability etc. This website Functions completely and administrates the details and provides information to the users and viewers. Thus, this Project implements and explains a resort Management Website.

Chapter 2

Project Requirements

2.1 Software Requirement Specification

A Software Requirements Specification (SRS) is a complete description of the behavior of the system to be developed. It includes the functional and nonfunctional requirement for the software to be developed. The functional requirements include what the software should do and non-functional requirements include the constraint on the design or implementation. Requirements must be measurable, testable, related to identified needs or opportunities, and defined to a level of detail sufficient for the system design.

Software requirement specification will state what the software will do. When the software has to be directly perceived by its users – either human users or other software systems. The common understanding between the user and the developer is captured in the requirements document. The writing of software requirement specification reduces development effort, as careful review of the document can reveal omissions, misunderstandings, and inconsistencies early in the development cycle when these problems are easier to correct. The SRS discusses the product but not the project that developed it; hence the SRS serves as a basis for later enhancement of the finished product. The SRS may need to be altered, but it does provide a foundation for continued production evaluation.

Chapter 4

Implementation

5.1 Front-end Technology

5.1.1 HTML

Hypertext Markup Language (HTML) is the standard markup language for creating web pages and web applications. Web browsers receive HTML documents from a web server or from local storage and render the documents into multimedia web pages. HTML describes the structure of a web page semantically.

5.1.2 CSS

Cascading Style Sheets (CSS) is a style sheet language used for describing the presentation of a document written in a markup language like HTML. CSS is designed to enable the separation of presentation and content, including layout, colors and fonts. This separation can improve content accessibility, provide more flexibility and control in the specification of presentation characteristics, enable multiple webpages to share formatting by specifying the relevant CSS in a separate .css file and reduce complexity and repetition in the structural content.

5.1.3 JavaScript

JavaScript, often abbreviated as JS, is a high-level, interpreted scripting language that conforms to the ECMAScript specification. JavaScript has curly-bracket syntax, dynamic typing, prototype-based object-orientation, and first-class functions.

Chapter 6

Testing

6.1 Software Testing

Software testing is an investigation conducted to provide stake-holders with information about the quality of the software product or service under test. Software testing can also provide an objective, independent view of the software to allow the business to appreciate and understand the risks of software implementation. Test techniques include the process of executing a program or application with the intent of finding software bugs (errors or other defects), and verifying that the software product is fit for use.

Software testing involves the execution of a software component or system component to evaluate one or more properties of interest. In general, these properties indicate the extent to which the component or system under test:

- meets the requirements that guided its design and development,
- responds correctly to all kinds of inputs,
- performs its functions within an acceptable time,
- is sufficiently usable,
- can be installed and run in its intended environments, and
- Achieves the general result its stakeholder's desire.

As the number of possible tests for even simple software components is practically infinite, all software testing uses some strategy to select tests that are feasible for the available time and resources. As a result, software testing typically (but not exclusively) attempts to execute a program or application with the intent of finding software bugs (errors or other defects). The job of testing is an iterative process as when one bug is fixed; it can illuminate other, deeper bugs, or can even create new ones.

Software testing can provide objective, independent information about the quality of software and risk of its failure to users or sponsors.

Software testing can be conducted as soon as executable software (even if partially complete) exists. The overall approach to software development often determines when and how testing is conducted. For example, in a phased process, most testing occurs after system requirements have been defined and then implemented in testable programs. In contrast, under an Agile approach, requirements, programming, and testing are often done concurrent

6.2 Testing Process

The application developed in this project is realized as a set of the following modules:

1. Users, 2. Event, 3. Sponsorship, 4. Judge. Each of these modules is composed of smaller sub modules. Each of these sub modules were developed and tested independently. Once the sub modules successfully cleared the test cases, they were integrated to form modules which in turn were integrated to obtain the entire application.

6.2.1 Levels of Testi

The following are the main levels of testing:

Unit Testing: A level of the software testing process where individual units/components of a software/system are tested. The purpose is to validate that each unit of the software performs as designed.

Integration Testing: A level of the software testing process where individual units are combined and tested as a group. The purpose of this level of testing is to expose faults in the interaction between integrated units.

System Testing: A level of the software testing process where a complete, integrated system/software is tested. The purpose of this test is to evaluate the system's compliance with the specified requirements.
